

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. LIBRARY LEGISLATION OF THE LAST GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

From the last General Assembly we received much valuable legislation in the interest of public libraries. For the first time in the history of the State we have a public library law which makes a public library possible to every city and incorporated town in the State, regardless of size or wealth; and this is the first public library law placed upon our statutes which gives to the people themselves the initiative in establishing a local library. These are the two most significant items in a good public library law, for through these the people have absolute power, and I believe no state has a law giving larger liberties or one under which it is easier to operate.

Under this law many public libraries are now organized and in operation.

AMENDMENTS NEEDED.

This law, however, is not without defects, but these defects are such as not to seriously impair its usefulness, but such as slight and simple amendments may correct, and I am sure that it would be well to have these errors corrected at the coming session of the General Assembly, lest they may impede the progress of many libraries in doing their best work for the people in the State.

I shall point out briefly what seem to me to be the defects that could be amended with great advantage.

The first is that the Public Library Board of seven members is entirely too large. All who are familiar with the work of boards and committees know that the best work is done by the board or committee of few members. A board of three is quite large enough to do the best service. The time, place and number of meetings are much more easily arranged for three than for seven, and there is much less likely to exist serious differences of opinion with the smaller board.

The second defect is the point in which the law to a degree dictates the composition of the board. If the power to appoint is provided for, the person or persons accepting that responsibility should certainly have the largest possible liberty. I believe that the general law should not dictate that three of the seven members of the board shall be women, but it should provide, as it now does, that women shall be eligible to appointment upon the Public Library Board.

In some towns in the State opinions upon this point are preventing the public library from being organized under this law. The local conditions and opinions should settle purely local questions, and they should not be dictated by the general law when such matters are not based upon essential principles.

In some towns, owing to local conditions and opinions, it might be desirable that more than a minority of the board be women, while in other towns it might be almost a necessity that there be no women on the Public Library Board. A very slight amendment will remove the difficulty. As Mr. Dewey has said, much of the best library work has been done and is being done by women, but it is always embarrassing to right-minded women to be legislated into official position.

COUNTY ACCESS TO CENTRAL TOWN LIBRARY.

Whether it be wise now to enact a law providing for county libraries is at present undecided. The fact, however, that Indiana provided for such as early as 1816, and that they failed, is not valid argument against them. The conditions are now so vastly different from what they were then, both with regard to the desire for library facilities and the physical condition of the country, which makes distance a matter of slight concern, that failure then does not by any means argue failure now.

There is a strong and rapidly growing demand on the part of the people in many counties in the State, to have access to a public library located in the county seat town. Many of these towns are willing that the people of the surrounding country have access to the local city library if some plan can be devised whereby the rural district can make just compensation for such privilege. Our law already provides for such privilege for the township in which a town or city library is located. We also have a law providing for a township to levy a tax upon the property of the township to establish and maintain a public library. By slight permissive amendments to each, or either of these laws, any township in a county could secure access to the county seat town library by turning its library tax into the fund which sustains the county seat town library. This, in effect, would become a county library, yet it would avoid many of the difficulties which would grow out of county library law as such.

The tax levy at a reasonable rate does not produce a sufficient fund to enable a township to sustain and conduct in the best manner a library that can be made most useful, but the concentration of funds in the county seat town would sustain a good library conducted after the most approved methods, and traveling libraries, or better, lending stations, could be established throughout the county, and the transfer of books over graveled roads, over interurban lines, railroads, and by rural mail routes, would make the library easily accessible to all the people.

Such an enactment should not be compulsory, but simply permissive, as, in fact, all public library legislation should be in this State at this time. Later, compulsory legislation may be desirable.

ORGANIZATION OF LIBRARY.

In the last biennial report from this office, it was stated that the national government publications had been classified and catalogued and organized into a library after modern library methods. Since that report was issued we have kept up the current work of the library, and have continued the work of organization in departments not before organized.

We have almost completed the classification and cataloguing of the State documents from other States, making available a large amount of material relating to the government and history of many of our States.

The section of biography has been classified and catalogued since my last report, as has been also the reference section. The sections of economics and sociology are well under way and will be completed within a few weeks.

REORGANIZATION WITHOUT EXTRA FUNDS.

When we consider the great amount of work done in this Library additional to the current work—organizing large portions of it never before organized, that all might be in one system—we must recall the fact that this work has been done without one cent of additional appropriation for that specific purpose. All of this has been done by our regular working force on the regular salaries, while it is usual where a library is to be organized or reorganized, extra specific appropriation is made.

THE INDIANA SECTION.

We have reorganized and much enlarged the Indiana section of the library, which now contains all publications by the State government so far as we have been able, with our scant funds, to collect them. It is with regret that we must continue to report these yet incomplete. The documents yet needed must be gathered slowly and at considerable expense, and some of them may never come within our reach.

This section also contains all books belonging to the Library, which relate definitely to the history of or life in Indiana, regardless of the times or place of the author. We have made this section as complete as is now possible by the purchase of all books, now available, by authors who live in Indiana, or who are usually considered as belonging to our State, although they may not have been born within the State, or who may now be non-residents of the State. More than 200 books have been added to this collection within the last few months.

MAPS.

Since maps are quite as valuable in an historical library as are books upon the same subjects, we have devised a plan for care of our maps that renders them as easily classified and catalogued and shelved as are books. We have had them cut in sections, arranged in original relative position and mounted upon muslin so they can be folded into book size, fastened in cloth bound covers in book form, and placed upon the shelves and labeled as books. This plan preserves the map, makes it easily usable, prevents it wearing by folding or rolling, as the map itself is never rolled or folded, and these points seem all that is really essential in dealing with maps. We find further that this can be done at reasonable expense. All the historical maps in the State Library are arranged on the above described plan except two large volumes arranged several years ago, mounted on canvas and bound without folding; and those which are a part of and bound with a text. The latter will be brought out by analytical subject cards in the catalogue.

Besides the historical maps we have a large number of geological and other scientific maps published by the U. S. government. A part of these come bound in thin volumes in manilla covers; those which come unbound we bind after the same style.

LARGER USEFULNESS FOR THE STATE LIBRARY.

The law providing that the State Library should be purely a reference library was wise in its time, but the new views that prevail with regard to the mission of any library certainly demand a liberalizing and modernizing of that law so as to make the State Library of larger service to the people of the State.

This larger usefulness can come only through a provision whereby many of the books in the State Library may be loaned to responsible citizens throughout the State. Of course there are a great many volumes in the State Library collection that are rare and costly, and many that could not be duplicated at any price, and these should never be loaned outside the Capitol, and it is doubtful whether they should go outside the Library rooms.

On the other hand, the State owns a large number of volumes that could be readily duplicated in case of loss, and if they were not duplicated the State would sustain no serious loss, providing their money value be reinvested in other books equally valuable to the State.

If these books be loaned, they should be loaned under such guarantee as shall not work a serious hardship to any honest and earnest citizen of the State, and yet such as shall absolutely secure the State against any possibility of loss.

Many of the citizens of the State need and desire to use the State Library, but most of them can not afford to spend the time and money necessary to come to the capital to consult the books, but would gladly pay all transportation expenses necessary to deliver the book to him at his home and return it to the State Library.

For the citizen living one hundred miles from the capital the cost of consulting a book for even a few hours is at least $6, not considering his time at home of any financial value. It is clear that, except in cases of very rare and expensive books, he could much better afford to purchase the book than to come to the Library. This should not be so.

Other States lend individual books from their State Libraries to responsible citizens throughout their respective States, and so far the plan has proved so eminently satisfactory that they do not desire and would not dare to return to the older methods. Indiana should do the same. She can not afford to be behind all the neighboring States in means of intelligence. Through such a lending scheme the State Library could become of infinite value to many persons and to many organizations throughout the State. We could serve in this way many clubs of men and women in the way of larger intellectual life.

The argument that one coming to the State Library to consult a book must find it there, is manifestly unjust. I am wholly unable to see why the citizen one hundred miles away, and who can not come to the Library, has not just the same right to be served as the man who lives one mile from the Capitol, and who can come. The lending period must be short so that many may be served with one book, both those who can and those who can not come to the Library.

INCREASED FUNDS.

While the lines of work briefly outlined above are the lines in which the State Library should direct its efforts, and the lines that it must follow if Indiana is to keep abreast of other progressive States, these things can not be done without additional funds. We are now doing all we can do under our present law and with our present funds, but with slight changes in the law and a moderate increase in appropriation of funds we can increase our present value to the State ten fold and the additional funds asked are an increase of but one-third of our present expenditure.

All that we shall ask in funds amounts to much less than is now received by the State Library of any other State, excepting just one, with which we care to compare our own State in wealth, intelligence or population.

CONCENTRATION OF ALL LIBRARY INTERESTS.

All recognize the economical value of the modern tendency to centralize administrative functions. This principle prevails because it is economic. The business of the State is subject to the principles of economy as is private and corporate business. Upon this ground of economy, as well as upon the ground of unity of effort, it seems that all the library interests conducted or supervised by the State, except professional libraries, should be under one administrative head and directed from one center.

In Indiana two heads, neither subordinate to nor even actually related to the other, are conducting library affairs. These should be consolidated at once, and all reason and all precedent points naturally to the State Library as being the natural, the legal and the economic head of the library interests of the State. The State Library is now controlled by a permanent ex officio non-partisan board, thoroughly qualified for the work; the State Library is a permanently established institution of the State and in every way thoroughly capable of conducting the library interests of the State.

Mr. Melvil Dewey, the Director of the New York State Library, in a recent talk before the Indiana Library Association, said in substance that two heads to the library interests of the State can not continue, and that the State Library is the natural head of all these interests and must take charge of them. In a recent written review of library legislation, the same authority (and there is no greater authority) said: "Recognition is growing that the State Library Board, by whatever name known, should have charge of the interests not only of public libraries, but of traveling libraries and of the State's own central collection, consolidating in a single board all book interests of the State."

These economic principles, added to the testimony of such men as Mr. Dewey, justify me in recommending that the law creating the Public Library Commission be so amended as to make the State Library Board the Public Library Commission also, and the work of this Commission be directed from the State Library as one of the legitimate functions of that institution.
